

Fading Suns: Noble Armada Greenlight Reaches for the Stars

ATLANTA (March 27, 2017) — The Fading Suns universe, best known from the Fading Suns roleplaying game, Emperor of the Fading Suns strategy game, and Noble Armada miniatures game, returns in a new PC RTS space combat game, "Fading Suns: Noble Armada." Now on Steam's Greenlight, this represents award-winning game developer Holistic Design Inc.'s return to PC development.

"Holistic Design has a long and storied career in strategy games," said HDI Vice President Andrew Greenberg. "In the 1990s, with Machiavelli the Prince, Emperor of the Fading Suns, Warhammer 40K: Final Liberation and more, HDI carved out a strong place for itself as a turn-based strategy game developer. Now it returns with its first RTS game based on our Fading Suns universe."

In Fading Suns: Noble Armada, players take on the role of a noble in one of the five Royal houses, vying against rival fleets and houses for control of human space. They battle pirates, barbarians, heretics and others in their quest for supremacy.

"Built with ClickTeam's innovative Fusion game engine, Noble Armada takes our space combat miniatures game and turns it into a fast-paced strategy game. It utilizes the miniature game mechanics while taking advantage of the best features of its new digital home," said Greenberg.

Noble Armada is a game of broadsides and boarding actions, as players maneuver their ships to line up their best shots, fire off broadsides of fiery energy and then board their enemies to end the battle with desperate boarding actions. As they travel from planet to planet, making allies and building up their fleets, they also gain the experience they need to make their crews and marines truly formidable.

Players can choose from a wide variety of campaigns involving five different houses. They can also design their own battles in the game's Skirmish mode. There they choose what ships they and their enemies command, as well as the victory conditions.
